

Humanity:

The Natural Masochist of Itself

By Gavin Eby

We humans have created our own suffering through our diverse subjectiveness whether we want to admit it or not. We have created the concepts of life that we hate, the 8 billion as of 2024 have enjoyed division, while claiming that they are against it, there are so many Philosophies, Ideologies, Concepts, Constructs, etc. that have divided us to the point where we are blind to our own contribution to division, we have grown ignorant, we must go extinct to save ourselves.

The Concepts

We have created concepts we think “bring us together” when they all have one flaw, controversy, people think the concept of sexuality has brought love, some see it as spreading disease, sin, instable relationships, destroying the nuclear family, etc. which each bring their own truths and flaws to the logic they bring, but the truths is what at least many of the worlds population is going to accept as fundamental, nothing changes, division stays. Even equality has its flaws, accepting delusion, and normality, leading to it being a division-causing idea on its own, people think ridding the world of the “true hateful people” will solve inequality and division, but it’ll just fuel it more, enough people are going to say, “this is not right” and it’ll return, malformed from its origin, worst. We think not giving them attention will make it go away, it won’t, they’ll do something so “outrageous” it can’t be ignored, enough people will be in an emotional state, they’ll look up to it to the point that it’ll grow, as I said, malformed from its origin, worst. Anyone reading this can pretend their beliefs have no correlation, but its because they don’t think deep enough, how do you think you are ending division in a way everyone will be satisfied? How do you know you are correct? It doesn’t matter, even if you are remembered past death, you’ll have flaws that people will say, “Is this person truly correct, even with their flaws?” and it’ll change over time, the thought of you becoming worst, even people like Martin Luther King Jr. are looked down upon by quite a few based on his constant cheating on his wife with prostitutes and abuse of women, people think only looking at the positives will change something, it won’t, there is more than just that, the idea of his “legacy” will still be held back by racial science, the actions of other pseudo-civil rights groups, feminists, people that delude the good, and make people hate it, our division is limitless, we even hope for our own extinction at time, but not even for the same reason, some its religious, others its depression, some even realize what I realize, even if its in a different manner, that nothing will ever change when it comes to the pains to humanity, created by humanity.

Division will even come from nature

Division will also never fade from things not caused by humans, such as weather and animals, something will happen to people because of something, and people will never all agree on it, Katrina has been justified by some as “deserved” others have called it a “sensitive topic” and even though the people who also consider it an atrocity agree about how bad it is with the “sensitive” group, the people who even mention it, no matter what manner, will be scolded by those who are too sensitive to even hear about it, ultimately causing division. It doesn't even matter if we agree on something, it seems we agree and disagree on parts of the same thing, later causing a ruckus among the 2 who agreed, showing that even people who agree on something will always disagree in some way, fueling division in and of itself.

Why is this essay so short?

You can contact me if you truly know there is something I should add, I thought I summed it up well. Someone will know where I'm available at.
